Professor Smith offers insights into how he thinks about his classroom teaching and his students' learning through descriptions of various assignments and classroom activities he has developed over more than forty years of teaching. The discussion ranges broadly over such topics as: how students read, the failure to adequately prepare graduate students as teachers, students' faith commitments, the use of newspapers (and humor) in the classroom, and the role of definition, de-familiarization, and critique of the study of religion in introductory classes. With this influential book of essays, Jonathan Z. Smith has pointed the academic study of religion in a new theoretical direction, one neither theological nor willfully ideological. "Mr. Smith" is the main antagonist of The Twilight Zone episode "Printer's Devil". He appears initially as a mysterious, affable and charming old man who offers to help the protagonist get his broken down newspaper business up and running again, but it turns out that he intends to get the man's soul in return for his "assistance", for Mr. Smith is in fact the Devil, and one of several manifestations of him in The Twilight Zone. Once upon a time there was a smith who had a son six years old—a sturdy and sensible lad. One day the old man was going into the church, and stood in front of a picture of the Last Judgment. And he saw there was a devil painted there so terrible, so black, with horns and tail! "What a fine devil!" he thought. "I will go and paint such a devil for myself in the smithy." So he sent for a painter and told him to paint on the doors of the smithy a devil who should be exactly the same as the one he had The Devil and Mr. O was a 1970's revival of radio drama. These plays originally saw the light of day on Lights Out, the classic late night horror radio program. Some of the plays have revised titles such as Alley Cat for Cat Wife, but have retained the suspense and appeal of the originals. The only problem is that if the stream format is used, you cannot switch to another website as it breaks the connection. You have to use the individual format, listed by title below the stream, in order to use the Windows format.
